

Company Fact Sheet

- Profile: Proventys, Inc., is a healthcare technology company committed to advancing personalized medicine through validated predictive solutions delivered at the point of care. The company's proprietary, Web-based platform leverages validated risk models and other predictive technologies to help clinicians make complex treatment decisions personalized to the patient across a range of disease conditions. The company's lead product candidate is a predictive test to assess an adult cancer patient's risk of developing chemotherapy-induced febrile neutropenia (FN), an adverse event marked by high fever, serious infection and hospitalization.
- Mission: Proventys' mission is to improve the way care is delivered to patients by helping physicians embrace predictive, personalized, and preventive approaches to medicine that lead to superior outcomes.
- Proventys sees a future where healthcare is changed from a reactive system, in which one size fits all, to a prospective approach that enables individuals and their providers to prevent, minimize, and treat illness on a personalized basis. Proventys hopes to play a role in this transformation by developing state-of-the-art predictive tools and decision support capabilities that are used in normal, daily practice by physicians and their care teams to help provide individualized treatment for patients.
- History: Based in Durham, NC, with offices in Boston, MA, Proventys was founded in 2004 by Dr. Ralph Snyderman, Chancellor Emeritus of Duke University and a national leader in the field of personalized medicine.
- Ownership: Privately held
- Financing: Proventys is backed by Burrill & Company, a leading life sciences venture capital and private equity firm based in San Francisco, Calif.
- Partnership: Proventys has a strategic partnership with McKesson Corporation, a healthcare services and information technology company currently ranked 18th on the Fortune 500.
